04/07/2020

This dataset has been acquired from datacamp, this dataset includes professionally tagged chords for several hundred pop/rock songs representative of singles that made the Billboard Hot 100 list between 1958 and 1991. We can analyse the dataset to find the most common used chords, how these chords have been chosen, trends followed in chords, etc.

This data set shows attributes like year, root integer i.e. very first node in a chord, root roman i.e. scale degrees of chords and quality : minor and major.

Musicians use different chords for different sound, as each chords has its own sound. And on top of everything each chord has a different difficulty level of being played. Some chords are easier to play while some are not and that too varies with the type of instrument on which it is being played on.

bb_20 %>%
  mutate(share = n / sum(n), chord = reorder(chord, share)) %>%

  ggplot(aes(chord, share, fill = chord)) + geom_col() + coord_flip() +

  xlab("Chord")

Inference: From the above visualization we can infer that the most preferable chords by the musicians are C:maj, G:maj, A:maj and D:maj. And least preferred are A:min7, C:min and D:7.
